You may make breaks in your journey within the validity period of your ticket. However, please bear in mind to follow several rules.

1. You must complete your journey by midnight on the last day of ticket validity.
2. If, after resuming travel from the intermediate station, the passenger has no chance of reaching their destination station within the validity period of the ticket, they may reach the station where the train stops according to the timetable for the last time before midnight on the last day of the ticket validity period.
3. A passenger with a one-day ticket, if they have started their journey on the day of validity of the ticket, may reach their destination station even after midnight, provided they travel without any break.
4. If completion of a journey within the period of validity of the ticket is prevented by a train delay, the passenger may reach the station of destination by the delayed train after midnight on the last day of validity of the ticket.

Note!

Making breaks in your travel may be limited for certain special offers. You will need to read the tariff conditions of the offer in advance.
